Search for Bomb Threat Perpetrator Intensifies

Jimmy Gramas
Archway Staff Writer

During the past week, Bryant has been plagued by 4 bomb scares. All of which resulted in a thorough search of the buildings and three of which were deemed serious enough to warrant evacuation of the campus. Richard Wheeler, director of public safety, has responded with an intense investigation into the caller's identity. The search involves public as well as private law investigation organizations. Mr. Wheeler stated that "people who do things like this always make a mistake, and that is when we will make our move." When the culprit is identified, Bryant and the town of Smithfield have stated on record that they intend to prosecute to the full extent of the law. Mr. Wheeler stated that "in this case, the full extent of the law means a 10 year prison sentence and/or a $5,000 fine."

As far as the actual course of the investigation thus far, Mr. Wheeler refused to elaborate as to whether the calls were being placed from an on or off campus location, whether they involved only telephone calls, and the exact nature of contact with the perpetrator(s). However, Mr. Wheeler did cite the burden the continuing bomb scares has placed on the Bryant community, he referred to the charge that Bryant must pay to the Smithfield fire and rescue departments each time they respond to a call as well as labor costs within the college. He stated that the costs will inevitably be passed onto and absorbed by the student body in the form of tuition increases.

Mr. Wheeler stated that "what we are dealing with here is a sick mind." Also, the selfishness of the individual(s) is shown in the total disregard for human life, if the rescue vehicles are unable to respond to a real emergency because they are occupied with a false alarm and a death resulted, the person responsible for the call can be prosecuted for attempt of first degree manslaughter.

Finally, Mr. Wheeler stressed the fact that he is not accusing nor exonerating any Bryant student(s) as a possible suspect in the investigation. "We'll just wait until this person slips up and then we'll get him (her)." In the event of a death or injury, the Town of Smithfield is prepared to prosecute on an attempted manslaughter charge. With Bryant looking to prosecute for disruption of lawful assembly and other charges, it seems like only a matter of time before a breakthrough will be made.

Tax Exempt Bonds May Help

industry is up and coming in the 1990's.

For many students who plan to enter college in the 1990's, watch out. College graduates from the United States will carry an average of more than $7,000 in school loans by the time they are ready to graduate. By 1991, it is expected to be over $9,000. The college "dream" is becoming a not so affordable reality. Average tuition costs have risen between six and eight percent annually. This rate is double the U.S. inflation rate over the same period. Along with increasing tuition, there is also a higher percentage of student loans than ever before in the financial aid package, and Federal Government aid has declined. Statistics show that few parents ever think about saving for their child's education until the child reaches high school. College education may be out of the reach of many families in the near future.

It is now becoming more essential to save than ever before. Most of the future jobs in New England will be centered in the service industry, thus requiring a college degree. Indeed, the service

NOW there is a proposed solution to help parents save for their child's education. There is now a Rhode Island "college bonds" program using small denomination (usually 100's), tax-exempt general obligation state bonds. These bonds would be exempt on the first $25,000 from the needs test for grants, and parents would save more. There is also the proposed establishment of family education accounts which would make exempt from state taxes the interest on savings for a college education. These implementations are designed to encourage families to save for education. Those who are interested in purchasing these bonds can write to:

The Rhode Island College and University Savings Program
P.O. Box 5860
Providence, RI 02902

If parents are ready to start saving now, they can start to benefit when their child enters college. The dream of a college education that seems so far out of reach can start to become a reality again.

APICS Tours Trifari

Drew Polinsky
Archway Staff Writer

The American Production and Inventory Control Society (APICS) of Bryant toured Trifari, the second largest jewelry manufacturer in the country, this past Tuesday. Located in East Providence, Trifari produces plated earrings, bracelets, chains and other accessories for women.

Dr. Sunil Babbar, Dr. Edward Grasso and a group of Bryant students were escorted by the Trifari staff through the twelve assembly line processes.

The tour route started at the Model Making department. Initial sketches and patterns were drawn up by artists, using European fashions. This was a very critical step in the production phase. If clients are not satisfied with the patterns, then the jewelry won't sell. The company tries to schedule new trends a year in advance. The lead time (the time between recognition of a need for an order and the reception of goods) for the production process takes about six to eight weeks.

After the patterns are sketched to meet approval, they are sent to the Mold Making Department. This is where rubber molds are engraved and later sent to the Casting Department. An aluminum-like metal is then poured into the designed mold to harden. After a short period of time, the jewelry shaped metal is removed.

Perhaps the most fascinating department was Tubbing. The main purpose of this process was to smooth out the rough areas on each piece of jewelry. In order to perform this function, the jewelry was dumped into a large rotating bin that contained small stone-like pebbles. For about six hours the bin would continue to mix its contents.

Following the smoothing process, the jewelry was sifted out from the stones. Now the jewelry was ready to enter the Polishing Department, where they were sanitized.

Up until this point the so called jewelry didn't distinctly look like jewelry. The pieces had a dull-like metal look, as the aluminum metal exemplified.

This was soon changed. The Plating Department then layered nickel, 14 carat gold, or other types of metals over the molded jewelry.

Immediately after the plating process, the jewelry was baked. This allowed the plating to harden. As a matter of fact, some of the pieces under went severe weather and perfume testing. Trifari values quality and takes 100% pride in their work.

The real test of the strength of the jewelry was proved in the Basic Assembly Department. This is where parts to jewelry were fastened together by soldering and other methods. For instance, stainless steel posts were driven into each earring. If the plating was inferior, then the post wouldn't be secure. Again, Trifari checked each process in the assembly line so that it met specifications.

A subdivision of the Basic Assembly was the Chain Assembly Department. Holes were drilled thru the ends of each chain, so that clasps could be fastened securely.

By this time all of the jewelry was ready to go thru the Finishing and Final Assembly Departments. These departments were crucial, since this would be the last time the products would be checked for quality.

Finally, all of the jewelry was ready for packaging. Everything was bar coded and stamped with a price and plant name. Distribution concluded the entire cycle.

Trifari plans to expand their plant capacity in the future. The company is people oriented and gives their employees emotional feedback. APICS is planning another plant tour in April to Federal Products in Providence.

The following is our new policy concerning bomb scares and fire alarms:

When the Unistructure is evacuated, the Day School class schedule will be put on hold. When students and faculty reenter the building, classes will resume where they left off. This delayed schedule will be maintained for the rest of the day. However, day classes will not continue beyond 6 p.m. If a room conflict should arise between delayed day class and an Evening Division, CMD, Graduate School, or SBDC class; the Evening Division, CMD, Graduate School, or SBDC classes will prevail. In that event, the Day School classes will be rescheduled to another day.

Once the students and faculty have returned to an evacuated building, the specific schedule delay will be announced on the public address system. Faculty Services Coordinators will post a notice of the revised schedule in faculty suite.

Write to Fight Wrong

The Letters to the Editor section of The Archway provides readers with a vehicle to express their ideas on various subjects: Archway articles and editorials, campus news, and any other concerns. It allows the reader to be subjective and express opinions, unlike a formal newspaper article in which the author should be objective.

In the past, this section allowed opposing sides to defend their positions. Unfortunately, the Bryant community seems to have forgotten about this forum.

Students continue to complain about various subjects, offer suggestions, or express a different view on a subject. Yet these people don't put their ideas in writing. Why? Maybe they believe that they can't write well or that their ideas aren't good. Maybe they think that people will find their ideas silly or that they could somehow get in trouble for expressing their opinion. This last reason, however, is the most disturbing. As Americans, we enjoy the first amendment and freedom of the press.

Unless we use this freedom in a constructive manner, problems can't be solved. People need to be made aware of what is going on. More importantly, solutions can't be put into effect if people aren't willing to express their ideas. Complaining isn't good enough; writing is a tool that brings attention to a problem.

Over the past two weeks the situation has begun to change. Several letters to the editor have been received. Unfortunately, there have been quite a few unsigned letters. These letters cannot be printed. The author must sign his/her name. Letters can be printed anonymously, but only if there is a name on the original letter for verification purposes.

People need to have confidence in themselves and their beliefs. They also need to be willing to take an occasional risk. This may mean asking for help if they are uncertain about their writing skills or researching an issue to make sure they have all the facts.

Of course, a letter to the editor doesn't guarantee results. But a lack of letters does guarantee a lack of results. Isn't the possibility of change better than the guarantee of no change?

Competition Rings out Jostens

A representative from the Jostens ring corporation went before the student senate yesterday, to get permission to sell rings in the Rotunda. She claimed that being located in the bookstore was the reason sales plummeted last year from 345 to 170 rings. But her request was a solution to the symptom, not the problem.

Artcarved began selling rings on the Bryant campus this year. Obviously they created competition for Jostens. Apparently, students are realizing that Artcarved produces a superior product. Jostens hasn't realized this yet.

The administration forbids vendors from selling goods in the Rotunda, with the exception of the bagel wagon and the newspaper machines. If Jostens was allowed to solicit in the Rotunda, Artcarved and the other vendors soliciting in the Bryant Center would also want to move. (After all, what was the Bryant Center built for besides checking mail?)

To go a step further, the representative had the audacity to request that Jostens be the official Bryant College ring dealer. Does Jostens deserve this right any more than Artcarved? No. Although Jostens has sold rings at Bryant for 17 years, students should have the option to choose one company over another.

Currently, to sell at Bryant, Jostens needs to be sponsored by a campus organization. The senate would rather Jostens be recognized as an individual entity, so they wouldn't have to handle these issues. Besides, an off-campus business should deal directly with the college.

Most students buy college rings after contemplating the issue. The Jostens representative stated that students are going to spend about $450 on impulse, and therefore Jostens should be able to sell rings in the Rotunda. Furthermore, she stated that students don't have the time to go the Bryant Center to look at rings. This is not true. If a student is interested in buying a ring, he or she will make the time to go over to the bookstore and look at the selection of class rings.

Near the conclusion of the senate meeting the Jostens representative suggested that she only be allowed to show students rings. By doing so, an exchange of money would have never taken place, making the transaction legal in the Rotunda. Even if a deposit was not required, the sale took place since the rings are paid by COD, months later.

Finding loopholes is not the answer to Jostens symptoms. Perhaps, the best solution would be to remove Jostens from the Bryant campus altogether.

Ed Explains Elevators

To the Editor:

Permits for all the elevators on the Bryant College campus have been renewed after an inspection on March 21 by the Rhode Island Department of Occupational Safety, which is the only agency with authority in this area.

The elevators were inspected as part of the occupational safety department's ongoing inspection program. That program, which mandates inspections for all elevators every 12 months, has been running behind schedule this year. This caused a delay in the renewal of the permits for Bryant's elevators, which expired on February as pointed out in your editorial of March 15.

The Office of Physical Plant regrets that the elevators were not inspected by February 18. But control of inspections lies completely in the hands of the state agency. We have no control over their operations.

Be assured that the reliability of all mechanical equipment on campus is a top priority of the physical plant office. The safety of the elevators, in particular, has never been in question as the renewal of the permits indicates.

Sincerely,
Ed Richard

Student Supports Free Press

To the Editor:

I would like to make something clear to Mr. Larranaga, the author of last week's letter, "Alumnus Defends Drury."

The purpose of media, and more specifically, a student publication, such as The Archway, is to create public cognizance of current issues in the world and in our community.

Public awareness of such issues as Mr. Drury's performance can become a catalyst in major decisions. For instance, the Bryant trophy case was neutered on the day that the letter concerning Mr. Drury's performance was published, and only several weeks later Mr. Drury chose to devote all his time to his duties as Athletic Director. I am not saying that the letter was the sole reason for any decision, but rather an influential factor.

Contrary to Mr. Larranaga's allegations, the issue of Mr. Drury's performance was brought to the administration's attention before the letter was published, and other ideas concerning this issue have been previously published in The Archway by other people.

It is blatantly obvious that changes have occurred concerning the Drury issue, and I do believe that the letter regarding Mr. Drury's performance played a role of influence.

I applaud the four student athletes for exercising their constitutional rights of speech and press by stating ONLY THEIR OWN OPINIONS AND FACTS, NOT SLANDEROUS REMARKS. I hope they continue their ethical means of expression to fight for what they feel is right.

Respectfully,
Paul Benedetto

Accreditation Controversy Continues

by The Bryant Faculty Federation

James Robinson, Bryant's Vice President for Academic Affairs, in an Archway article of March 2nd, gave his views on the meaning of Bryant's pursuit of accreditation by the American Assembly of Colleges and Schools of Business (AACSB). His views were understandably positive, an attempt to associate AACSB with a broader effort "to enhance the character of the College." The Bryant Faculty Federation (BFF) submits that those views are at best controversial; that the AACSB accreditation process has narrowed Bryant's character, dangerously cutting it adrift from its historical mission, forcing it to engage in practices that some may conclude constitute fraud. The BFF has no official position on AACSB accreditation; it does feel, however, that all sides of the issue should be openly discussed. The following is the second of several articles offered to the Bryant community in the interest of this open discussion.

Last week we suggested that the AACSB had little to offer a stand-alone business college like Bryant. However, Dr. Robinson alleged that AACSB accreditation for Bryant is the desire of "parents and prospective students and to those of employers." No matter what we make of the AACSB personally, as a college we must be responsive to the desires of these aforementioned groups; after all they are our "customers." What we must question, however, is whether these groups really use AACSB accreditation as a litmus test for acceptability.

Several studies, conducted by Bryant and for Bryant by outside consultants have failed to demonstrate that AACSB accreditation would enhance the attractiveness of the college for any of the aforementioned groups.

Indeed, these studies seem to confirm only the relative obscurity of the AACSB. Most of the people polled have little or no knowledge of the AACSB or its place in higher education, let alone what to make of a college not so accredited.

As a student (or administrator, trustee, or non-business discipline faculty member), ask yourself how you came to know of the AACSB. Like many people, there is a high degree of probability that your knowledge of the AACSB was learned from being asked that you think about AACSB accreditation, and then being told in that questionnaire what it was!

As far as accreditation is concerned we should bear in mind that, through the New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC), Bryant, like Brown, Harvard, The University of Rhode Island, The University of Connecticut, and other major universities and colleges in New England, is an accredited member of the American Council of Education (ACE), the national organization which, through its Committee on Post-Secondary Accreditation (COPA) accredits colleges and universities throughout the country. The AACSB is recognized by COPA as an accreditor of business schools; however, in this regard it competes with the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS).

Within three years yet another organization (mercifully entitled as of now), led by Washburn University, with over 100 member colleges and universities, will be accepted by COPA as an accrediting agent for business schools. What is interesting about this group is that they were formed because they believe that the AACSB's accrediting standards were unrelated to measuring the performance of the business schools and tended to raise the cost of delivering business education rather than improve its substance.

As far as employers are concerned, lack of AACSB accreditation has had little to do with the employment prospects of Bryant's seniors. In fact, over the past 15 years, and more, Bryant's growing reputation of quality (a growth accomplished without AACSB accreditation, or the anticipation of accreditation either) has made Bryant's seniors all the more marketable. Bryant's current President, William O'Hara, in his recent letter to parents and students proudly, and rightfully so, points out that:

Last year, for example, 214 companies sent representatives to our campus, one of the largest numbers of recruiters to visit any college in the Northeast.

The quality of our educational process has produced graduates who have performed well in the business world, a fact that undoubtedly enhanced the desirability of hiring Bryant graduates. The vanity of the AACSB in this instance is the assumption that the business world uses them to pre-screen its recruits. The hard fact is that graduates of liberal arts colleges are more attractive than business college graduates of whatever stripe. It is the liberal art graduate who most often ends up in the more lucrative, fast track, management training programs of large corporations. Bryant's success within this context can be explained through its recent, but unfortunately abandoned, curriculum structure and educational programs.

Sound Mind, Sound Future

by Lisa Antoninich and Mark Messer
Archway Staff Writers

One of the prices we pay for technological advances is an apathy toward the basics of learning. This is evident in the declining literacy rate in the United States, as well as in the dependence of many on calculators to do simple mathematics. This apathy plays a large role in the deterioration of hegemonial powers.

Partly to blame for widespread illiteracy is the dependence of Americans on technology. Not only do people rely on machines to do calculations that they would have done out on paper or in their heads twenty years ago, but fewer and fewer of us read newspapers. Most Americans rely on television for information. This ability to get by on images lessens the desire of many to read anything but a menu.

Many view the transition from a reading public to a watching public as indicative of the changing needs of our society. This may be true to some extent, but declining literacy rates often signal an apathy toward education, which is a key to remaining competitive in the global marketplace. When the U.S. won its independence from England in the 18th century, the literacy rate of Americans was about 95% versus 80% in England. Now, as Japan is gaining influence in world markets, we see that only 4 of 5 Americans can read, while 85% of all Japanese are literate. The apathetic attitude of Americans toward education contrasted with the enthusiastic love of learning in Japan could be one reason for the shift of power out of the U.S. and into Japan.

Reading for information is not the only way to boost the collective intelligence of the United States. Reading for pleasure can contribute to the geometric growth of our knowledge base. Reading allows us to explore new ideas or look at old facts in a different light. Few people, I believe, understand that the yellow brick road in the "Wizard of Oz" may have been an endorsement of the gold standard, or that the tin man and scarecrow represent the industrial and agricultural sectors of the economy at the turn-of-the-century.

Intelligence isn't the ability to memorize, it's the ability to interconnect bits of information and use them for your own purpose. One way to pick up bits of information is to read more. The greater our intelligence, the greater our ability to be more intelligent becomes. One way to learn is to read. In order to ensure a brighter future for ourselves and our children, we must try to read more and promote learning for all.

Public Safety Responds to Blackout

Jimmy Grammas
Archway Staff Writer

Lightning struck an electrical transformer outside the Bryant campus last Saturday, March 17th, at approximately 1:00 pm. As a result, Bryant was left without electricity for the better part of the day.

Richard Wheeler, director of public safety, and John Rattigan, coordinator of fire and safety, responded by increasing the number of security employees patrolling the campus and notifying the Smithfield police of the blackout.

Wheeler stated that the additional patrols were needed in order to prepare for any disturbances that might have arisen.

Rattigan notified the Smithfield fire and rescue departments and made sure that all campus fire alarms were fully operational. Rattigan stated that backup generators ensured the continuing function of the fire alarms and emergency lighting.

Both men stressed the fact that the security and safety of the campus was not compromised during the incident.

Spring Break in the Core of the Big Apple

by Michael Cain

My friends were going to Daytona, Fort Lauderdale, Puerto Rico, New Orleans and Cancun. Where was I going? New York City. Yeah...that's right, the city that never sleeps. I might not get a tan but I might be discovered by a moviemaker or be asked to do a guest appearance on The Cosby Show.

The hotel I stayed at was particularly unique. Checking in took almost an hour. I knew it would be a pleasant stay after the desk clerk said, "I hope you brought your sleeping bags." I think he was new at the job because he had us sign everything except his forehead.

We were waiting so long in the lobby we decided to sit down on the comfortable carpet. The hotel security approached us a couple of minutes later and said, "Please stand." I thought we were going to break out into a quick rendition of the Star Spangled Banner, but we didn't. I guess there was no LOUNGING allowed at the hotel other than the lounge that is.

I was shocked when I saw our rooms. They were smaller than my closet at home, equipped of course with two very single beds. The rooms were decorated in neon green and the view was of the double-decker Burger King across the street.

After getting settled in our hotel room we thought it would be nice to see some of the city. So we walked, avoiding the book stores that had Satanic Verses in their windows, walked and walked and 30 blocks later decided the subway was our only choice home. Everything is in walking distance in New York if your at least slightly athletic or profoundly stupid.

At 7 o'clock that evening we looked for a restaurant to eat dinner. The only problem was that most of them were closed except for the fast food outlets. The restaurants had closed at 7 o'clock. I thought New York was the city that doesn't sleep. We finally found a place that served dinner until 8 o'clock. They called it a "Gourmet Delicatessen" this meant you got pickles and cole slaw with any item ordered.

We were in one of lesser neighborhoods of the city and store owners needed time to lock up and drop steel curtains in front of their stores.

I noticed that night after 1:00am when the doormen for the hotel had left, that beggars soon took over for the doormen. Women in furcoats were a little surprised from the help the homeless gave them. I wonder who gets better tips, the homeless people or the doormen?

The TV's in our rooms had these weird cable devices. You could turn to a movie and then watch it for about 5 minutes until a flashing red light on the converter went off for about another minute and then you were charged for the movie. They even had the adult version of the Three Musketeers. Only the finest entertainment can be found in New York.

The next day when leaving the hotel people approached me and said, "Hey...got any Knicks tickets?" The Knicks were playing a game next door at the Garden. "No," I replied. Then they would answer, "Well do you want any?"

The trip was eventful, but then again who goes to New York and doesn't come back with a few intriguing stories to tell.

Khomeini's Mistake

Mark Plihcik
Archway Staff Writer

For a while there, it almost looked as if Iran and its Ayatollah were going to step quietly out of the limelight and ride off into the sunset. But only for a while. Khomeini, Iran's spiritual leader (who seems to exert more than just spiritual power over his people) has brought Iran and Islamic fanatics back to the forefront of world news by communicating a death sentence to Salman Rushdie, author of The Satanic Verses. So what's the big deal about a man who finds that a few things about his religion might make an interesting novel?

I haven't read Rushdie's book, nor do I plan to be one of the millions of people worldwide that will end up buying the book to satisfy the curiosity brought on by Khomeini's proclamation. I really don't see the sense in my reading a book that I would probably find incredible boring and irrelevant to my life. Rushdie wrote his book in order to appeal to a limited audience. I'm sure that when he first decided to write about his religion, he didn't run to his publisher and tell him "Boy, have I got a neat idea for a novel! Picture this. A young man finds his God through an angel. And I follow his life chronicling his temptations by the devil. And the beauty of the idea is that it will be so interesting, that millions of people will buy it, and it will be a best seller for years to come."

So like I said before, what's the big deal? If the Islamic world is so upset with Rushdie for denouncing his religion, why don't they just let him take his chances with Allah? When Khomeini sentenced the British-Indian author to death, he caused the world to scrutinize Islam in a way that no religion needs to be scrutinized. His actions have caused more harm to his nation and religion than Rushdie's novel ever will.

When Rushdie wrote the book, governments didn't denounce Iran for the cruelty of its practices, and authors didn't ban together in great numbers to support a man whose work has been greatly ignored by the majority of the world. However, by the Ayatollah's opening his mouth and sounding off representing not just his religion, but his entire nation, he caused people to stand up and take notice.

It isn't everyday that a man from a country known for terrorism sentences a man in another country to death for writing a book in which he makes a few references which may or may not be derogatory to Islam.

Through his proclamation, Khomeini spoke where his government probably wishes he hadn't. Because now, he has put them in the uncomfortable position of having to defend Khomeini's actions and words, a position that has gotten them into diplomatic trouble with many nations throughout the world, not the least of which is Great Britain (we can't count the U.S. because we still haven't lifted the trade embargo that we imposed on Iran in 1979 as a result of the hostage crisis.) These nations could conceivably, in addition to pulling it's diplomats from Iran (which many have already done), refuse to buy Iranian produced oil. This is the big blow to Iran, because without oil, the Iranian economy hasn't a leg to stand on.

But by backing down and condemning the Khomeini statement, the Iranian government would have looked horribly whimpish and un-patriotic. So they let Khomeini's statement go, hoping that it would blow over. But then a five million dollar reward was offered to any Iranian that succeeded in terminating Rushdie's life. The result: one country in a feverish uproar over a book that would have faded into oblivion without Khomeini's statement, one government scrambling to cover their butts as the result of a radical extremist who interprets the word of his prophet in a warped manner, and one English author hiding out under the protection of Scotland yard.

If Khomeini had simply left well enough alone, Rushdie probably would have won an obscure literary award for his book, and it would have sold about 10,000 copies. But by using harsh words in a rash manner, he has succeeded in not only putting his country in economic jeopardy, but in also putting his religion back into a light that is less than favorable. He has cast the spotlight on the Islamic world once again, and once again the light portrays the people and culture of Islam in a darkening shade.

Littering Could Cost Students Money and Time

Jimmy Grammas
Archway Staff Writer

Richard Wheeler, director of public safety, has started an ambitious program to curb littering on campus.

Some of the proposals he has presented to the community include a stiff fine for those caught littering, and, for repeat offenders, a day or two spent with the grounds crew cleaning up litter. He also stated that the school will look into placing more waste barrels in areas where the most littering occurs.

Chief Wheeler stated that the problem of littering affects all Bryant students. The director said that "Bryant's grounds crew has worked to maintain the park-like grounds of the campus for current as well as prospective students."

He said that the crews are sometimes forced to work longer hours, employing more men "to clean up the mess left after a busy weekend."

Chief Wheeler expressed a concern that future students will be turned off by the appearance of the campus if the problem continues unabated.

Gear of the Great Outdoors

Surveillance Cameras Near Completion

by Stephanie Brush
Washington Post Writers Group

In heaven, all the angels have wonderful camping equipment.

You may wonder where I got this idea, since in your fantasy of heaven, all the angels are playing harps in marble-paneled hallways, and eating off gold dishes all day. "So they obviously have no inclination to go camping," you might say.

But I never said that the angels in heaven actually camp. I just said they "have wonderful camping equipment."

Because, just as I do, they get all these stunning catalogs in the mail from Eddie Bauer and R.E.I. and L.L. Bean. And it sets up a deep-seated, primitive yearning in them to call the toll-free number, with credit cards handy. Up to now in heaven, evening wear had always been the standard dress code.

I have felt this movement coming since the late '70s. Now "Newsweek" has announced that high fashion is stone-cold dead in America. America has thrown over haute couture in favor of "Gear."

Based on the Guiding Triad of action Principles of the '90s, we Americans live to "do" things. And better yet than this is having all the necessary equipment lying around which might be required for the "doing" of things. I must be highly differentiated equipment, or else everybody could afford it.

America is a country where, let's face it, if the outdoors calls, we will give it No. 1 priority on our "call waiting."

The President of the United States was recently pictured on the cover of "People" wearing some striking outdoor gear manufactured by the popular Patagonia Company. It was unclear which activity he was about to fling himself into the thick of, but there were little, crisp beads of healthy presidential sweat standing out on the presidential brow.

Looking at him made me want to, well, breathe.

As a writer in New York a decade ago, I had an almost pathological need to spend time in sporting-equipment stores: I had written a letter to the "advice" column in "cosmopolitan," saying, "I am a young, single woman living in New York City. Where can I meet a lumberjack?"

I spent all my disposable monthly income on Nair and tents. I kept the tents folded in the closet. The men in the store offered to teach me to "pitch" the tents. "What is that, exactly?" I would ask. Every time tent technology improved, I read about it carefully, and sometimes I upgraded my sleeping bag and bottled white-gas supply.

"It's in anticipation of the man I shall someday marry," I said to my mother when an aluminum stake fell out of the closet on her. "The man I shall someday marry must own a tent."

"And will the two of you camp?" She asked.

"We will discuss our enjoyment of camping," I said.

When I met Bob eight years later, I duly asked him whether he had a subscription to "Outside" magazine. He replied quite correctly that he avidly reads, subscribes to and despises "Outside" magazine.

We often read and despise "Outside" magazine together, because it fills us with a sense of wistful "Gear Inadequacy." Everyone in "Outside" magazine is pursuing glamorously highly differentiated outdoor equipment, almost always from Patagonia, the Yves St. Laurent of the outdoors.

It is quite clear to me why essential gear is so widely available through catalogs:

Visiting "Gear Retail" stores (Gear-oriums) is only advisable if you are blonde and closely resemble all three Hemingway sisters on the verge of overdosing from oxygen. They're places where you must know many extremely important gear-verbs and bits of gear jargon, as demonstrated in the following conversation:

"I'd like the Quallo-Fill Lycra-Tex Parka with the 304 inch detachable straps, and a vectored Trans-Alpine neck gaiter."

"Will you be 'rappelling?'"

"No, I'll be 'pontooning' and 'kickgliding'."

I continue to enjoy feminine activities and tiny sandwiches with the crusts cut off as much as the next person. But girl-clothes are just no fun to spend money on anymore.

The essence of great marketing is to make you crave a product long before you've discovered any clues as to its actual function. My idea of the perfect garment would be a strapless Gore-Tex windbreaker in salmon or pale apricot. I would look, let's face it, stunning in this. The day they think of an activity to match this gear, I will be up before dawn.

The much anticipated completion of the surveillance cameras in the main parking lot is drawing closer. Richard Wheeler, director of public safety, expects to have the system fully operational by the time classes resume on March 28th. The state of the art camera system will enable the public safety office to monitor the parking lot 24 hours a day. Also to be implemented will be the new overnight parking rules for resident students. In a compromise decision, residents will be able to park in the most secure lot and will have easy access to a call box if they need assistance from public safety. Commuters will use the lot closest to the unistructure so as to alleviate problems that have arisen in the past over the loss of choice parking spaces. Mr. Wheeler Stated that these and future measures serve his goal of making Bryant "the safest campus in the country."

HELP WANTED: EXPERIENCE GIVEN!

The Bryant Center is now taking applications for the position of Bryant Center Student Manager. The position provides an excellent opportunity to gain valuable management experience BEFORE you graduate.

Bryant Center Student Managers work approximately 20 hours per week, and are responsible for supervising the Bryant Center in conjunction with the full time professional staff. Managers are also responsible for the development and training of student staff, and the effective supervision and scheduling of the Bryant center operations.

Applications are now available in the Office of Bryant Center Operations, 2nd floor of the Bryant Center. There will be a meeting of all interested applicants on Monday April 3 at 5:00pm in the North Dining Room to answer any questions applicants may have. All applicants are due at the Office of Bryant Center Operations by 4:30pm Tuesday April 4.

Chaplain's Corner

College Students Deal with Religious Decisions

by Rev. Coryl Lassen-Willems
Protestant Chaplain

Spring Break is a time when a few students go home or visit grandparents (usually in warm places) and a lot of students head south to Florida, Mexico, maybe even the Caribbean. Students who go south are looking for warmth, expecting to have a good time with friends, and exercising their independence.

Students who go home may experience some awkward moments. They have spent nearly a full school year away from home, essentially on their own. No matter how many restrictions the school imposes, no matter how often they talk to Mom or Dad on the phone or go home for short visits, there are too many occasions when students make their own decisions about what they do and when they will do it for it to be quite like being at home. When they go home for an extended period, both they and their parents are likely to assume that they will continue to do things the way they have been doing them. The only problem with this is that what parents mean by that and what college students mean by it may be two different things. Generally, parents will say they recognize a student's growing independence, but still have some qualms about it. The last time they lived full-time with their son or daughter was when the student was in high school and subject to their restrictions. It is likely that they will still have some underlying assumptions about the rules being what they were at that time.

College students, on the other hand, have been living a somewhat less restricted existence for anywhere from seven months to three and a half years. During that time, it is likely that the students will have thought about and questioned many of their parents' values and habits. They have been living in an environment and with people different from those their parents know. Gradually they have been changing and growing up. Even the students may not be aware of the extent to which they have grown and changed - until they come home for a week.

One of the areas where college students and their parents often have some conflict at this time is going to church. Let me give you a couple of scenarios:

Joe and his parents are Roman Catholic. Joe has been taught since childhood that he is supposed to go to church every Sunday and on Holy Days of Obligation. When he was a freshman, Joe went to Mass on campus nearly every Sunday, and felt guilty when he didn't go. By his junior year, Joe was only going a few times a year. He felt he had better things to do, and he had a lot of questions about the Church anyway. Mostly he didn't think about it...Except when he went home, and his parents expected him to go to Mass. Sound familiar?

Sandy is a sophomore. She comes from a traditional Congregational family. She was very active in the church youth group in high school and still has friends from there. In the middle of her sophomore year, Sandy met a boy from a nearby Pentecostal church. He encouraged her to go to church with him. She went and found she enjoyed the singing and the warmth of the people. At first she found it pretty intense, but after a while she decided that she respected the church members because they acted on what they said they believed. She is considering church membership. When she goes home, her parents ask her if she is coming to church with them, or would she rather go out to brunch with some old friends. She decides instead to try to find a Pentecostal church near her parents...who are not happy with her decision.

The second one may have surprised you a little, but actually, both students are examples of the very same maturing process. Right now religion may not seem very important to your life. And yet you may find yourself surprisingly adamant about making your own decisions about religious matters. The truth is that religion is important, important enough to make up your own mind about. Religion, and all the things related to it like values, decision-making and business ethics, is also connected to how mature we are emotionally and socially. Many people do not begin to sort out what they will do about religion until they are more mature emotionally and have made some decisions about things like job, housing and marriage.

All of which is a long way of saying, your parents may not understand that by not going to church, or by worshipping in a different way than they do, you are beginning to make your own decisions about something very important. They may just have to trust you to be the adults you, and they, think you can be.

Career Savvy

Financial Planning Careers

by Melissa Barnes

If you like finance and accounting, and you enjoy helping people, financial planning could be the career for you. To find out more about this career direction, I interviewed Nicholas Scata, an '85 Bryant alumni who is a CPA with Schnidman and Company and a Certified Financial Planner.

Q. Why did you decide to become a Certified Financial Planner?

A. I was introduced to the idea by a partner in our firm. After three or four years we are asked to decide if we want to specialize. I was interested in tax planning and financial planning broadened the area by including other types of planning. In addition to tax planning, there's insurance, investment risk management, estate planning and retirement planning.

I am a goal-oriented person, and I liked the idea of sitting down with someone and working out their financial goals and setting up a financial game plan. There's a lot of gratification in working with people on their personal finances. You get to know them better, you become their financial psychologist.

Q. What part do you like the best?

A. Just sitting down and talking with people about their financial objectives. We talk about sending the kids to college, retirement and what they'll do when they're 65. Sometimes it can get pretty challenging when one spouse wants one thing and the other wants another. I find myself playing the middleman.

Q. What do you do after you discuss their objectives?

A. We help the client formulate a budget and then lay out two or three possible plans. Once they accept one of them, we help them implement the plan. We follow up with them in six months to see how the plan is working. Things change over time, so at that time we modify and revise the plan accordingly if necessary.

Q. What did you do to get certified?

A. I took courses through the College of Financial Planning based in Denver. Each course included a study guide and text books relating to the topic. After each course, there is a three-hour exam which is given by the International Board of Certified Financial Planners at a participating college or university. Each of the six sections is about comparable to a full-semester course at Bryant. I understand that a masters program is now being offered which will soon be accredited to give an MS in financial planning, as well.

Q. Where do you expect to go with this?

A. I anticipate someday having a financial planning department here at Schnidman and Company. Right now I still spend 75% of my time in accounting and tax planning, 25% on financial planning. Financial planning is a growing field offering a lot of opportunity.

STUDENT CHARGE

Applications are now being accepted from Bryant College seniors who are interested in delivering the Student Charge to the Class of 1989 during Commencement Exercises on Saturday, May 20, 1989.

The Student Charge is a "motivational" speech which encourages graduates to look toward the future. Applications include an original two to three minute speech directed to Bryant graduates and appropriate to the ceremonies. The speech should be submitted double-spaced, with five space paragraph indentations. Names should NOT appear on the content page(s). A cover sheet accompanies the application. The cover sheet contains the following: Full name of applicant; local address and telephone number; best times to contact applicant by telephone.

Applications will be accepted until April 11, 1989, 1:00pm. Please submit cover page and speech to Dr. Cynthia E. Johnson, K 208, 232-6172

The undergraduate commencement exercises will be held at the track oval, rain or shine on Saturday morning, May 20, 1989.

Graduates will line up at 8:50 a.m., the Procession will start at 9:20 a.m. and the exercises will begin at 10:00 a.m.

Diploma cases will be presented by department chair assisted by department faculty. Graduates will be notified by their departments of a meeting at which time specific instructions will be distributed.

Caps and gowns and special invitations are available through the College Bookstore.

Name of tentative graduates have been posted on the Registrar's office bulletin board. No corrections to the program will be made after April 15th.

NEED MONEY?

The Student Senate is looking for someone who knows shorthand to record minutes at next year's meetings. If you are interested please contact Harry Franks at 232-4111.

Each Sunday in April, and May 7 and 14, regular religious services will be held:

Protestant Service: 12:30 p.m. - Bryant Center Chapel
Catholic Mass: 12 noon and 9 p.m. - Bryant Center, Meeting Room 2A & B

The last Sunday services for the semester will be on May 14. In addition, there will be holy day Masses for Ascension Thursday, May 4, at 12 noon and 3:30 p.m. in Bryant Center Meeting Room 2A & B.

ACTUARIAL ASSOCIATION NOTES

The Actuarial Association of Bryant College will be holding nominations for next year's executive board on Tuesday, March 28, 1989 at 7:00 pm in Meeting Room 3 of the Bryant Center. Elections for President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer will then be held on April 11, 1989 at 7:00 pm in the North Dining Room of the Bryant Center. One representative from each class will also be chosen on that night.

A number of students who will be classified as seniors and juniors in the fall semester have not picked up their degree audits. Students must bring these audit to preregistration which begins on April 3. Audit sheets may be picked up in the Registrar's Office.

LEARNING FOR LEADERSHIP ID361

2:00-3:15
Dr. R.J. Deluga
Tuesday & Thursday
Faculty Suite F, Room 435
Fall, 1989
232-6279

What is ID361?

Part I of Bryant College's Learning for Leadership program is an intensive examination of leadership from a multidisciplinary perspective.

How do I learn about leaders and leadership?

A variety of active learning techniques are employed to stimulate your leadership development including: class exercises, case studies, issue debates, written assignments, class lectures/discussions and exams. You also choose a recognized leader as your focus throughout the semester. As we discuss the various leadership issues, you can share the perspective of your chosen leader. The instructional aim is to have you experience success and to discover that both the study and exercise of leadership is a fun, exciting, and demanding endeavor.

What is the leadership speakers forum?

As a special part of the Learning for Leadership program, successful leaders practitioners and prominent scholars are invited on campus as "a guest leader for the day". The forum enables you to informally interact with the guest leaders.

Instructor Permission Required.

Vive la (new) President! Congratulations to our new E-board: Janeen, Lori, Kim, Dor, LeeAnne, and Kris, and to all the new officers. Even more congrats to the "free" Seniors, right Lisa and Jen? I'll remember Lisa and Kris, everything happens for a reason.

During the blackout Saturday Cindy and Lori experienced the GREAT FLOOD - say yes to puddle jumping, but say no to no electricity. Other sisters ventured to Asia. Isn't a $120 bill a bit much girls? This small trip caused a big trip for Fougie in the Dorm Six pit, leaving her able to only salvage one lone grain of rice. Nice buns! Hey, BTA all the way.

Last week, Kari learned how to create an OREO. The question is, who ate it? Janeen has learned that sometimes the radio needs to be answered, and not the phone.

Tricia, how was your day at the beach? Were the flaps side? Ask Toast what it means.

News flashes!!!...Due to misleading information, we believed that Kelly had been excommunicated from the church. However, we are happy to say that she has been pardoned... Luann and Lori narrowly escaped death while trying to park the car... Kristin has been "frazzled" ... Cindy R. is now "Hook"...

Janeen had her singing debut at Kirby's. She will now be available for other functions. Contact the floor for further details and a free demonstration.

It is said that Fougie has a bad influence on innocent sisters, such as Boomerwang! It is another belief that she is not so innocent. Don't worry, I won't spread rumors, I come right to the source. After all, you'll tell the truth. Burke has learned the truth about Parks - he's lame at Tap and Go. But, Kris, does he need Cindy and Lori to carry him home?

Good job Judd, we are very proud of you.

Question of the week: If one of your sisters is drunk and falling down at the townhouses, what would you do? Find Curt.

Scoop of the week: You know who you are.

Quote of the week: If you're an S, in search of a PEP, it sucks to be you.

HAPPY EASTER TO EVERYONE!!!!

APK TOP CAT!!!

Hi! Since we missed the last week's news, here's some old news. Our end-of-pledging party was great on Wednesday before Spring Break! Thanks to Leslie, half the sisters got the wrong shirts!! Carolyn, AND WE'RE BIG!!!! Thursday night we hopped from party to party, luckily Clueless was cured of her Beta Blues and is now onto bigger and better things! Hey June- where's the Beav??

A happy birthday goes to Jacquie who turned 21 last week!! Congratulations -you're finally legal. No more getting carded at Bennigan's!!

We're glad to see that everyone got back safe and sound from spring break, and that Chiquita didn't get eaten by sharks like we had feared! Coach wins the award for best tan. We think she was secretly going tanning at home and just made us think that she went away. We want proof!! Four of us were even lucky enough to go to beautiful New Jersey to spend the weekend with other Alpha Phis. The trip back definitely made the weekend memorable. We always wanted to get lost in downtown NYC for an hour - thank God for men in toll booths!

Congrats to all the sisters-luckily there are no "super pledges" this year! We never realized we had so many talented sisters. Oscar does a great imitation of Chuck Berry and she and Chicky are quite the artistic ones as they decided to "fix" Bake's poster on Friday.

St. Pats was celebrated with a sisters party at Rena's and then we hit Phi Ep full force-not for long though. Coach - do you remember anything for Friday?? Later we went to Delta where Lib FINALLY got up the courage to ask her date to the formal. Hurry up-you only have 6 minutes left!!! We have now reached our limit of 2 Delta brothers at our formal. Yes, that does include our faithful advisor and chauffeur!! The rest of you-find a formal date SOON!! Coach is now accepting applications for the position. Tower picked up an intellectual on Friday, and what a send-off she got!! Chicky didn't seem to be on the best of terms with one of the Phi Sig brothers-wonder why? Luckily there was no fight on Saturday when they met again. Elmer missed all the fun on campus, but made her own fun dancing on the tables at the Senate Banquet!

Let's go to the laundromat again and see how many more alumni we can meet!! Congrats to Coach and Chicky on an awesome job drawing at Win, Lose, or Draw - didn't think you were gonna be able to stand up much longer. Too bad neither of the teams got anywhere! Anyone want to go shopping at an adult toy store?? Quote of the week: If...

Well another week came to an end. St. Patty's was celebrated in the usual festive occasion. Elroy turned Irish for a day. His mother's maiden name is Esposito but he still thinks he's Irish. Animals was wrong. Saturday night the Jungle Punch hit. It hit Dudley a little too hard, he thought he was Mole and parted his hair on the side.

We had our elections; Patch is Pres and Pledgemaster, Bone and Iggy received Vice Presidents and Tucan and Telly rounded out the Executive Board. Round like John Peters. Well speaking of Phi Sig we parted with them for free. AGAIN! Singer stop trying to be Cormiere. Oh, by the way John Peters cme doen and failed the "I Bet U Can't" glass, again.

We are going for a townhouse, Ahhhhh! The NCAA tournament is half over. I looks like Vic will win. Grover, Duke and Force are going for second. Telly, nice draw. I wanted Robert Morris. Did I forget to tell you that John Peters was fat. Will we ever see Gator again?

For world news: Squirrel is never coming back. He joined the Austrian boys choir. Cindy Lou who was on our floor biting everyone. Rude Kirby's schicks should be shot. Don't walk away J. Hey, why you hit me in the head with a hammer? Who let Grover in? Hawk sooo sad. Elroy needs a formal date, but after he took off his shirt at Kirby's it should be no problem. By the way, our pledges quit. Tucan stay Gold. Syracuse #1. La Lloyd LaLane disappointed everyone for Athletic director. I wonder what Bone is wearing today. Brides in three weeks.

Remember, its alright to sucker punch someone, even if there a girl a grade lover than you. Suede Simpson's out! HAIL PARTCH! CHEEK: Mario "Elroy" Andretti DOG: Agggggg, Vic....Vic

BΞO

Hi everyone!! Our weekend has come and gone and what a weekend it was! Thanks to Jolie, things ran smooth as far as our events are concerned. The psychic, Craig Karges, on Wednesday was incredible. Now that everyone has Margie's home phone number, feel free to call anytime. The Comfort was a fun night for everyone who was able to go. Green beer definitely took its toll on several people. The mixer Friday night was highlighted by the Boston Getaway weekend raffle. Wasn't it just a little strange that Slo-Mo happened to be involved with the winning ticket??? Congratulations, Laura!!! Win, Lose, or Draw went over really well and once again, TE took home one of the prizes. Why is that?? Congratulations to TEP, who came in first and to TE, who came in second. Thanks to everyone who supported us this weekend. Jolie, thanks for all of you hard work, it really paid off. YOU DID A GREAT JOB!!!

Friday afternoon we all headed out to a great outdoor happy hour with Phi Sig and Delta and select others. Spring fever has definitely hit us early! Curt came very close to taking a plunge in the pond, lucky for him that he was dropped before making it to the water and fell on a rock instead. A few PFD's were found that afternoon and now Phi Sig has the majority at our formal. Then we were all off to Tony's for pizza and a few more laughs. Trainwreck had a problem keeping things from spilling all over the place - we knew he had a drinking problem all along!! We returned to campus just in time to head out again for the night. Later, we returned to floor and then headed out our separate ways. D block seemed to be the place to be, however, some of us still insisted on going up to Delta to partake in their "grab bag" party.

The loss of electricity on Saturday added to the amusement of the weekend. ARA offered a romantic dinner by candlelight that was just too good to pass up. Things do taste better when you can't see what it is! It was a good thing that the lights came back on because we were in danger of setting the suite on fire with all the candles we burned. Saturday night we had a party on our floor after our event and Phi Sig invaded the floor. Milt made a guest appearance to surprise TK - what a guy! Just for the record, Tiny, you did not throw Shannon out of her own room and she would appreciate it if you would leave her monkey alone!! For some unknown reason, Sherm felt the need to visit us. No need to say anything more on that subject. Brian Shannon is ready when you're ready to collect on her loss. Barbara, take the chimp out of Wop's pants!?!?!?! Wop, how did it get there in the first place??? Even though the electricity was working, some people chose to spark up the candles again and create some atmosphere for whatever reason. The suite became some sort of passion palace as Bill, Sue, and Opus created a human pretzel on the couch and others strategically located themselves to suit their needs.

To those sisters still looking for PFD's: Phi Sig has filled out applications and is ready to interview for the positions. Just call their floor but don't ask for Bowie, we heard the he's already filled his quota. The formal is just a week away - new sisters get psyched for the night of your life! Luck for Phi Sig that they get to have two formals this year and we're paying for one of them. Oh well, Milt wasn't going to theirs anyway!!

Everyone have a good Easter break and, SISTERS, come back ready to be FORMAL BOUND!! Until next time.....

Fonz won't be writing the Greek News this week because he is looking for beads, so hopefully this will be deemed good enough not to edit.

The big news of the week is that Shrubber succumbed to the might power of the Purple Haze. The week turned out to be quite boring (so what else is new?), and the weekend kicked off with a not unhappy hour at the softball fields with Phi Sig, BSO, and some fat kid. We beat Phi Sig in softball, but then again, you have to expect us to beat Phi Sig in outdoor events (i.e. football 7-6). That night saw a mixture of different malt and barley extractions. You know it's a bad night when you are happy to have a Piels, right Jeff? Mel, Helmet, Licker had a little battle of the witless late night to see who hated their bodies more. One of them won.

Saturday saw the departure of the over 21 crew to Providence for a nice day of bar hopping. They obviously had a good time since they decided to spend the night in New York. Once they managed to get to the Big Apple, they went into the Bitter End, where they were ditched by Split. Apparently he spent most of the night begging people to buy him quarts of Old English 800.

In Delta sports, we beat Phi Sig 7-6. Verna lost his excess grease collecting apparatus. If anybody has seen Chris Foss or Teddy Rykoski lately, please keep it to yourself. A little community service not that we feel obligated to print: The surgeon general has determined that speaking to Herbie's girlfriend can result in serious head injury and tin can assaults, right Matt? Peace.

P.S. Hey TE, Check your Greek News.

KAP

Hey dudes. Quite a week it was. St. Patty's Day can make for quite a holiday, I guess. The action began on Friday afternoon for most of us. The grove was fun but not enough for some. "Let's go for a spin!" Quote of the Week from Nutty, "TREEEEEEEE!" Fun was then had with APK. The green stuff was a bit too much for some. Everyone woke up at 11:00 that night. Vis woke to the sound of Whitey and Manzy trying to shave his mustache. Later on, Maniac met up with a wall. Next time just hush Jay.

In KDR sports, Danny took Digger down on a three count. Bowling seems to be the sport lately. Pants and Boz were talking the other day:

Boz: It's raining cats and dogs out there, Pants.

Pants: No it's not. Just bowling balls.

Saturday was spent in the dark. Not much happened that night except for a few treats. Magilla and Frass were joined at the hip for the weekend, except for when Frass was hitting on a girl, or two, or three. Some of us cruised by Providence with the appropriate veggies.

A conversation overheard by a little bird:

"Have you seen Gouz?"

"Yeah, short, black hair, baggy pants?"

"No, medium height, brown hair."

"I think I know a different Gouz."

"Maybe there's two."

Rumor has it that the Link and Jr. were both sober one night last week. Speaking of Jr., congrats goes to the new Mr. president.

Formal dates are still needed. We are getting very desperate. Speaking of desperate, Ya-Dude makes five. We hope Dean and Droid are recovering well. Happy Easter.

Till then,

Coop

P.S. - Epsilon class go to Coop's room to recover clothing.

Good afternoon. I'm sure all will be happy to know this reporter will be at it again next year. Elections were held on Sunday, and here are the results. President - Andy Freeman; Executive V.P. - Rock; 1st V.P. - Craig Lloyd; Pledgemaster - Mike Durand; Treasurer (embezzler) - Jeff Misenti; Secretary (the revenge) - Jeff Misenti; and a key position, Chaplain - Brent Gruver.

Friday a bunch of us went down to Red's for some green refreshments, ask Freeman how much he loved the green liquid the next day, BUT then again he won't. Once again it was nice to see Rock out and about with his muscles, he tried to use them down at the townhouses in order to get up in front to request songs. I was going to tell you about Bugg's weekend to N.Y.C. with Hep. and Phillips, but it is too long and confusing, then again any time you talk to Bugg its long and confusing. Everyone thanks Fudgy for not ruining our week-end by staying here. If there was one person of this campus this past weekend who had a great time it was Dave L. That's all he kept saying over and over again especially on Saturday. It was a good thing that Freeman was with Jeff Friday night because he wasn't able to say anything that night especially...It seems as though two stories this past week were almost swept under the carpet; however, I found them. It seems that Gruver has been taking lessons from Bugg on personal hygiene. Last week he awoke and watered the carpet, chair, desk...In other news it sounds that Pat had all the moves this weekend. As the story was leaked to me, no I don't mean Gruver, Pat was slapped in the face by a girl named Sue and then a drink was thrown in his face by a girl named Sonia. Pat was a real gentleman about the whole thing and he threw his drink in her face and then wanted to beat her up, but Babyface was there to save the day. Good job Face. Pat you are a tough guy in my book.

On Saturday, a few of us got together for a friendly game ??? of kickdodgeball. Don't worry Mike I haven't forgotten about being hit you know where.

In the KT Sporting News Department two wins in a row put the L-Z in contention for basketball title. Babyface led the Loading-Zone in a key victory over the tough and rugged Gutmen. Great basketball was played by Gruver and Rich who were all hands. The other victory was a stunning come from behind forfeit. A great game was played by our two centers Rock and Steve.

The Brothers of Phi Epsilon Pi would like to send out a huge thank you to everyone who helped out with the penny drive. Also, congratulations to TEP, TE, and BSO on your weekend.

Excellent job A-team in an exciting B-ball game vs. Beta. After a grueling matchup, once again Phi Ep walked away victorious. Keep the undefeated record going strong and steady. Great motivation by all the brothers giving the excellent support including too tall trigger who was up for a visit and put banana bobby shats man do back in his favorite state of mind, with stomach and body tied in knots.

Pinkie's life is looking up! For saving the Brothers from embarrassment, Franks Weeks we can't thank you enough!! You still have a long way to go Dahhn so don't get cocky. Haj Paj keep it out fo the T.V. suite, room keys are available at security (sorry Brothers, boideij doije on Haji). Our Phi Ep sweetheart is making rounds across the floor, Brian Sloth is number four. Ohhh bbBrian.

Thank you bartender Locke and bartender Margait for the top of the morning-ohhh. Mc, St. Pa(r)ties, WOWamassa What %$&*@ Happened?, gig, with plenty of green cheer!!

Alvi's bedroom is the bar suite bathroom. However, for Frank it's just the opposite! Where has your grape been lately?!? Where are the new brothers? Don't be afraid to come visit once in a while Rock, Stay Puff, Jay, and Juanita. By the way, getting nervous about your favorite number?? You better be or it will be even harder on you.

Corey hope you enjoyed your first social gathering in two years. With still about a month to go,

ΦΣΝ

The brothers are coming off a rough weekend partying with our new Irish friends. We started off Friday when we found out the secret field wasn't that much of a secret. (Thanks Woodsy) What started off as a simple party turned into a family reunion of Hooker's. Bowie perked up when he heard the news, but he didn't stay perked for long.

Friday night team BOOZE had its toughest match ever. We were on the road against all of Providence and the underdog city was ready for us. We started off slow but when we hit our stride there was no question who the winner was. The work mules and subservient booze slob cracked under pressure and the team rode the Valarie back to Bryant with the victory.

The next win came only 3 hours 42 minutes later when the Giant bucket of ice was the playing field. It started as Phi Sig Delta (pick one), Tep, and Theta. 3 minutes later it was down to Phi Sig and Delta (pick one). It was the age old battle of youth vs. experience. Of course youth prevailed making Phi Sig the hands down winner and proving once again that Delta (pick one) always pulls out too early.

In Phi Sig sports we made restitution for the cheap win by Delta on the hardwood floor. By this time we will have already beat Beta also and enjoyed the fruits of our labor. -- THANKS GUYS.

ΣΙΒ

Well, the votes are in and it goes like this - President - Brinkley, Executive V.P. - Fribble, Social V.P. - Onyx, Pledgemistress - Gizmo, Secretary - Jitter, Treasurer - Skyler, Assistant Executive V.P. - Electra, GLC Representative - Treble, Alumni Secretary - Teegeo, Historian - Malibu and Weekend Coordinator - Cupid!! CONGRATULATIONS! The FULL MOON this weekend has caused some needed words of encouragement:

When you're down and troubled and nothing is going right, just remember - at the end of the tunnel, there is a light. It may be dim, and far away but you WILL reach it someday. Along the way there'll be twists and turns, and the load may seem too hard to bear, but stick to the journey with your head held high, there are so many people who CARE! Remember too that I am by your side to give you strength when you're lost inside, you can ALWAYS count on me, I will never hide you see. You just call out my name, and you know where I am I'll come running.

Life is funny and strange and frustrating, and everyone will have their share of good times and bad times and times filled with despair. Hearts may be broken and tears may be shed and all your good feelings may seem to be dead, but time heals all wounds, so they say, so just take every step, Day By Day.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY to Gidget and Splash! And Happy Easter everyone!

ΣΛΘ

Hello readers! Hope everyone had a good weekend! The party seemed to last all week for everyone, in one way or another. Sandy, Debby and Heidi furthered their public relations with their new found friends in Dorm 8. Figures the people you meet in Florida end up coming from Bryant. Heidi showed Delta a thing or two and ended up with a grand total of 34. Next time Vema should know better than to challenge a one on one. Then there's Daryl, only the champion over KDR.

Things got a little blurry for a few seniors later on in the week - especially Nicole. Perhaps if the Comfort installed lighted OCCUPIED signs on the stalls in the restrooms it would avoid further confusion. If anyone is interested, the Townhouse plans on marketing and selling their new dice game sometime next week. Thursday, Kim & Jean decided to play "I can beat that" in the bathroom on the 4th floor.

Thanks to bomb scares and other assorted diversions, it gave the Sisters a good reason to start saucing early. It was basically a split between Kirby's and the airport. Then it was onto the party that almost never was. D-Block packed quite a crowd for what ended up to be a campus-wide sing along. Heidi lost herself in the crowd and McIndoe lost her ability to stand.

Even the rain and lack of electricity couldn't dampen our spirits and our pre-party gathering with Phi Ep was a blast. We'd like to thank Casey and Corey for coordinating the games for the evening. Too bad Casey didn't realize the cards were stacked against her. How Sandy was spared from kissing the Porcelain God, is still a mystery.

It seems that Theta's early morning Crow has returned. In other words, The Kid is back - for how long is the question. To all those still campaigning to go to our P.F. - and you know who you are - you applications are still being reviewed and new applicants are welcome.

Finally, hope everyone has a Happy Easter and Happy Birthday to Pam Galgano and Tina who are joining the ranks of The Elders.

TE

The week started for many of the losers at the Comfort. But they were all lightweights and lasted but a few minutes.

Friday afternoon was the beginning of the end for certain unsuspecting losers. Starting with a happy time with the Sibbies nunnery. Raul took the first initiative when he fell asleep at the bar at Parentes and the losers left him. Fortunately he never came home.

Unfortunately Reina found out where he was!!! Reina, being the model student and soldier of fortune that she is, HIT HIM WITH A HAMMER and informed his girlfriend of his festivities from the night before.

One of our loser alumni showed up Friday with five dollars...a good typical TE time was had by all. Wow, sounds like fun. A whole five dollars. Good thing we are all lightweights, five dollars goes far that way. The power failure in the afternoon sent the losers out in the rain to get our weekly showers. Saturday night brought even more of our old brothers who failed out bearing more loose change.

In sports, we lost to Delta a while back by 13.

Here is the new executive board. Don't forget slo-Mo, get a haircut, ha ha.

Hola Eager Readers,
I was unable to enter the news because I was in no condition to write after returning from spring break. To start I would like to say congratulations to those brothers who now hold new positions. Bill, our new president, will surely lead us well as long as he stays in control. Cujo and Kal-El attended the BONJOVI concert and remembered one song at best. Kal-El broke Cujo's precious comb, but it was quickly replaced. Zone chose a choice place to get ill, and he still owes Kevin three sheets. We would like to thank the fourth floor Theta sisters for a wicked fun time!! I hope all the brothers are looking forward to this year's pledge formal, this is definitely going to be one to remember. Does everyone have a PFD? If not you're running out of time quickly, maybe you should sign APK's list. What is Binkley going to do?

Pope has been placed on a diet, but is he allowed to cheat and with what dishes. All brothers who took the train to Florida are murderers. Ian and Pope indulged in 1.75 liters of Pina Colada, while sunning on the Aloha deck.

Stone would like to thank everyone who voted for him for the senate VP position, and especially the brothers who helped him campaign.

We would like all the people who attended the events last weekend. Craig Karges, the magician, was excellent and had some very funny stories to tell. The Comfort was hopping the night before Saint Patrick's Day. Otis and Pope took home memorabilia and Bill had to be put to bed.

Everyone started early on Saint Patrick's day, playing Pyramid on the bar. The trouble in the Vatican was taken care of too. Zone, Bill, Otis and I made it to Delta's grab bag bash which was a great time. Zone finally opened his townhouse so everyone could continue the festivities.

Saturday we were visited by these notorious alumni: DOOBER, LIBS AND KURT. They spiced u the night in their own certain ways. TJ - Do we have another TEP & APK connection? Binkley had a busy weekend for himself, and his girlfriend saw the wild side of fraternity life. Pee-Wee began to remodel our suite and bathroom even though he doesn't remember.

In sports, the TEP-A team continued it's undefeated season by beating KDR. TJ and Shed had exceptional games and Stole and John had numerous steals.

LBA this week is a tie. Kevin for his extended hangover and Zone for being Ralph Cramdon.

Hopkinphetes log: 3/17 - 3/22

Admiral McIlhinney has left us, last seen traveling at warp speed in the USS Pinky.

-Beep. This is Captain James T. Parks. What is it Scotty?

-Captain, I can't hold her much longer, we're caught up in an electrical storm, the lights are getting dim, I think we're going to lose all power.

-McCoy, what can you do?
-Dammit Jim, I'm a new guy not an electrician!

-Scotty, how long until we get power back?

-Not until 1900 hours, sir. We might have to evacuate the ship.

-In the meantime Scotty, send for the ambassador from the USS APK, Captain J.T. Bakes. She will be beaming aboard with her contribution.

-Yes sir.
-Mr. Spock, it's almost 11 o'clock, how does it look in the control room?

-Well captain, logically speaking, there seems to be a plethora of life forms wishing to quench their thirst. Even we should be able to turn a profit.

-Great, Spock. How are the acoustics?

-Bad News, Captain. Mr. Sulu has abandoned his post.

-Takoff, Capuzzoid, take over the controls.

-Yes Captain.

-Spock, what does it look like down there?

-Well, Captain, there must be a strong magnetism here. First, there are a myriad of gyrating bodies getting closer together, and then, one by one, they pair off and travel to destinations unknown.

-Is it a gravitational problem Spock?

-Apparently sir. There have been five reports of people who have retired to their sleeping quarters, yet found themselves being violently uplifted, and buried beneath their beds.

-Captain! Captain!

-What is it Sergeant-at-Arms?

-It's Kahn, sir. He's at the door. He says if Takoff doesn't lower the decibel output, we shall be subjected to his wrath.

-Do as he says.

-Captain, we have two more problems. The mess hall has sustained a direct hit, and the door's jammed.

-What's the second problem?

-It's Scotty, sir. He's acting like a Klingon. He's trying to penetrate the force field with shattering projectiles and your command chair.

-Set your phasers on stun and hit him with the photon and the New Ron.

-Yes Sir.

-Well, Spock, what's your evaluation?

-Overall, Captain, a successful mission. I am looking forward to stardate 3-22. We will be docking with our sister ship, the USS SIB.

-Over and out Spock.

Racquetball Rolls Towards Nationals

"Slap" Fox
Archway Staff Writer

This past weekend, the Bryant Racquetball team competed in the Northeast Intercollegiate Regional Tournament held at the United States Military Academy. Overall, the Bryant team ranked fourth out of eighteen as the women's team placed an impressive second. The whole team put on an excellent exhibition of racquetball and expect their outstanding play to carry them to a top ten national ranking in New Orleans, LA. next week.

The women's team proved to be nearly unbeatable with second place finishes by Denise Savoie, Janelle Ridder, and Debbie Anderson in divisions I, II, and IV respectively. Also Debbie Young placed third in division VI. Denise and Janelle continued their unbeaten season for division I doubles by dominating regionals and winning the championship.

The men's team kept pace with the women's team by earning a second place finish in men's division III doubles by partners Gary McCarthy and Brendan Sullivan.

Several match victories came from players Dave Barnes, Scott Hainey, Rudy Sequeira, and John Acampora in their respective divisions.

Other players contributing to regional play were Jean-Marc Apollon, Karen Boutin, Robert Fox, Adam Katz, Karen Landry, Stephanie LeMaitre and Won Sang Yoon.

The team has worked very hard to reach this point and are looking forward to competing at Nationals next week and representing Bryant College. We all wish you the best of luck!

Athlete of the Week

Denise Savoie

The Athlete of the Week this week is Denise Savoie, member of the women's racquetball team. Denise, competing in women's Division I racquetball at the Northeast Regional tournament at West Point, New York, placed second in the individual competition. And with doubles partner Janelle Ridder, took the championship in the doubles competition. After her strong performance at West Point, Denise hopes to place in the top three at the nationals in New Orleans, LA next week.

On a lighter note, I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Women's Basketball team on a fine season. They defeated Bentley 71-70 in the final of the NE-10 tourney on a buzzer beating 15 footer by Laura Scinto, before succumbing to New Haven in the first round of the New England regional tournament...I'd also like to wish Bob Reall and his women's softball team good luck this season, his first at their helm...A note from the wonderful world of golf. Jim Hallet, who graduated from Bryant in 1983, is currently in his second season on the Professional Golfers Association tour. In his rookie season last year, Jim's net earning after tour-related expenses was $134,025. His prospects this season look even brighter. Not bad pay for walking around and getting a tan all day. What a life, huh?

* Clinched Division
~ Clinched Playoff berth

Tomasso and Bryant: A Winning Combination

Mark Plihik
Archway Staff Writer

The road to the Division II women's basketball tournament is a long and arduous one. Just ask the Bryant women's hoops team. After playing second fiddle to Bentley for the entire season in the standings, the lady Indians finally shook the monkey off their backs and proved who was the top team in the NE-10 conference, defeating the women of Bentley 71-70 in the NE-10 tournament, thus assuring them an automatic berth in the NCAA tournament.

The game was billed to be a barn burner, and the fans weren't disappointed, as it was close throughout. It went down to the last play of the game. The score was 70-69 with only seconds left on the clock, and Bryant had the ball out of bounds. The ball found its way into the hands of Laura Scinto with one second left, and she promptly heaved a 15 footer at the buzzer to win the game for the Bryant women.

The victory was especially sweet for Coach Ralph Tomasso, as his team beat the tenth ranked team in the nation, assuring his team's tourney berth. "We may have made the tournament even if we lost the title game. We would have had 19 wins, and that puts you right on the edge. But I slept a lot easier Saturday night knowing we were already in the tournament, rather than waiting to see which at large teams the Laura Scinto goes in uncontested for an easy layup against Assumption.

Unfortunately for Tomasso, it's also tough for a northern team to win up here, especially when your competition includes three nationally ranked teams (New Haven 5th, Bentley 10th, and Bridgeport 15th.) The Indians found themselves up against a tough New Haven team in the semi-finals of the four team New England regional tournament. Although they played New Haven tough in a close loss earlier in the season, New Haven proved why they were ranked number five nationally, as they ended the Indian's season with a 94-71 loss.

Tomasso credits his team's success this year to the head coach of the New York Knicks, Rick Pitino, who he met at a signing of Pitino's book Born to Coach. Says Tomasso "I asked Rick what he would do with a women's team like mine. He asked all about my personnel, then he said he would shoot more more three-point shots. He that it would open it up inside for some of our bigger players. So I went back and we started shooting a bunch of three-pointers. We haven't hit a great overall percentage (only .269) but in a lot of games it made the difference."

committee selected on Sunday," said Tomasso. Tomasso was optimistic about his team's chances going into the game, as they would be playing in the New England regional tournament. "I think it's to our advantage to be playing here in New England. Last year we were shipped down to the south regional in Mississippi. It's tough for a northern team to win down there."

I Don't Want to Say Good Riddance, but...

Mark Plihik
Archway Staff Writer

Well after months of controversy, Leon Drury has finally done what the Bryant community wanted him to do, and what he should've done a long time ago by most folks estimation. He has given up the helm of the men's basketball team. But for all of his faults, this year especially, Drury did have a rather good first half of a career, leading the chiefs to a national Division II ranking in 1980. He was also named Rhode Island Coach of the Year in that same year.

I mean, let's face it. It's not like the man didn't try. I'm not saying that he did a good job, just that he tried. He had to make a commendable effort over the past eleven years, trying to guide the team at practices and games, while at the same time taking responsibility for scheduling games for 27 varsity teams. Leon Drury just bit off a little bit more than he could chew (we all do, don't we?) and over the years, the combined stress from his two monumental tasks gradually ate away at his ability to perform both jobs at an acceptable level.

I think that Mr. Drury made a correct choice in resigning from his coaching position, because he is far more valuable to Bryant as an athletic director than he would be as a coach. He has worked within the structure of first the NE-8 and now the NE-10 for the past 11 years. He knows the Bryant Community. Because of these two reasons, he is far more able to schedule games in a way that benefits Bryant than someone who would come into the NE-10 and the Bryant Community cold. A basketball coach, on the other hand, has no such problem. Instead of having to acquaint himself with an entire league's inner workings, he simply needs to gain the respect of his players (something that could be far easier said than done.)

With Drury staying full time as AD, he can direct his full attentions to scheduling Bryant varsity athletic teams in a manner that will offer the greatest competition and experience to the athletes of those teams. His successor as coach will be able to devote his energies to the direction of the Indians to winning seasons and Division II ranking for years to come (of course, it won't be as easy as that, but that's another story.) So to Mr. Drury, good luck in future endeavors as AD. And to his successor as coach, good luck to you in your effort to make our men's team a team that will once again lounge near the top of the NE-10 standings. This arrangement will ultimately lead to the betterment of not just the men's basketball program, but of Bryant athletics as a whole.

The Road to the Stanley Cup

by Mike Boulet

The National Hockey League's 80 game schedule is quickly coming to a close, with less than five games remaining. For the avid hockey fan this does not mean that the end has arrived. It can be considered a fresh start with the beginning of the play-offs.

In the NHL, 16 of the 21 teams qualify for the play-offs, or the top 4 teams within each division. The league is divided into two conferences. The first is the Prince of Wales, which consists of the Adams and Patrick divisions, while the Campbell conference is made up of the Norris and the Smythe divisions. The winners of the Adams and the Patrick divisions play each other to determine a Prince of Wales champion. The winners of the Norris and the Smythe divisions play each other and the winner becomes the Campbell champion. Finally the winners of each conference play each other to determine the Stanley Cup champion. Here are my predictions of who I believe will win each division and finally, the Stanley Cup.

The Montreal Canadiens, who are currently first in the league, will easily win in the Adams division. My decision is based on the power that the possess. A 20-8-1 divisional record, the best defense in the league and the best offense in the Adams division are amongst their strengths.

The New York Rangers will somehow pull an upset and win the Patrick Division. They have the best divisional record and the most goals scored in the Patrick Division. The Rangers held first place in the Patrick for about half of the season and just recently lost it, injuries playing a big role in their slide.

The Detroit Red Wings, who are the only team above .500 in the Norris Division will win it. The Red Wings dominated virtually every statistic within their division. They also have Steve Yzerman, who is one of the most explosive players in the league.

The Smythe Division looks like no contest for the Calgary Flames. They have one of the top defenses, the second most goals scored in the league, and are currently second overall.

Now we come down to the finals of the Prince of Wales and Campbell conferences. My pick for the winner of the Wales is Montreal, and Calgary will win the Campbell conference.

Finally, let's have a good look at my predicted Stanley Cup matchup, the Montreal Canadiens vs. the Calgary Flames. The two teams met three times in the regular season, with the Canadiens winning two on the road and losing one at home. So if they do happen to meet in the finals, home ice advantage will be a very small factor. Defense: Both teams have exceptional defenses. They have been battling all year between first and second place. However, I have to give Montreal the advantage due to the fact that their defense is more experienced and have had the least goals scored against them in the past two years. Offense: Calgary is the clear winner in this category. To date they have scored 30 more goals than the Canadiens' 295. Power play: Calgary was third, while Montreal was tenth overall. Since Montreal has an average of 19 minutes of penalties per game and Calgary has 29, I have to call this one a draw. Penalty killing: Once again, both teams were close, with Calgary ahead by a small margin. However, Calgary was penalized much more than Montreal this season. The result: a draw.

So after all of this analysis, it looks as if the match up would be fairly even, right? I, however will have to give the Stanley Cup to Montreal. The Canadiens have won it 23 times, while Calgary never has. The two teams met in the 1986 final, and Montreal beat the Flames, four games to one. However, Calgary can't be ruled out. I'm sure that they want the Cup as much, if not more than anyone else.

How About a Round?

Do you enjoy the sights and sounds of nature? Does the challenge of a sport excite you? Would you like to be able to mix business and pleasure? Have you ever felt like hitting something with a club? If you answered yes to any of the above questions then you could be one of many people who take up the game of golf. Young people are realizing that golf isn't just for their fathers. Here are some reasons why people take up golf.

Golf is a wonderful form of exercise. It is a game in which choose your own pace. It doesn't require risking life or limb (unless another golfer runs you down with their golf cart.) It is a healthy way to release tension. Golfers find great relief in swinging a club and get a wonderful feeling when they whack the ball (no matter what the actual distance.) Golf is enjoyed by both sexes, and it is a sport that can be enjoyed through out life.

Each golf game offers a different challenges because there are a multitude of courses to play around the world. In addition, the elements of nature are constantly changing the playing conditions which adds to the difficulty. At first sight golfing may look easy but in actuality the golf swing is one of the most unnatural positions of any sport, and it is not easily perfected. Thus golfers devote a life time to practicing their swinging position.

Golf is a very social game. It is also a great way to conduct informal business dealing among executives. Playing is suited to all different life styles. Some like the elegance of a private club, while others take advantage of the economy of the public courses. Everyone enjoys the famous nineteenth hole. Some refer to it as the only "water hole" where no one ever lost their ball. It is the time to tally the score cards and discuss the shots of the day over a couple of rounds of favorite libations.

Question. Why do golfers enjoy chasing a little white ball around vast, wide open spaces? The answer is simply to get the @#*& in the hole.
